

KEY POINTS - Think Like the Interviewer

Companies conduct interviews because they want to figure out if you would be a good “fit” with their company. They want to make sure you would be a good employee for their workplace.

In an interview, companies might ask you questions about:

1. Your educational background
2. Your work and volunteer experience
3. Your personality
4. Your communication and social skills
5. Your teamwork skills
6. Your ability to cope with stress and frustration
7. Your ability to solve work-related problems

They might not ask you questions about all of these skills, but it is better to be prepared!
